

Oliver Herisson

+ CYBER SECURITY
+ ASSISTANCE / TRAINING

After graduating with a master's in law and security strategies from the Pantheon-Assas University in Paris, Oliver Herisson held several different positions in the Home Office, mainly in the intelligence service on highly advanced Cyber Defence and Digital Security.

After his first experience as an analyst in cyber security where he mostly carried out watch missions he moved onto more operational missions -gathering information in cyber terrorism and cyber espionage, establishing national and international cyber defence strategies – and finally became the head of a cyber security team.

Ten years of experience on sensitive subjects has helped him acquire solid expertise in the field of cyber threats and digital security. The complementarity of technical missions and national projects have bestowed him with a precise and global vision in the politics of digital security, the protection of data and in analysing the cyber risk.

For several years he has assisted organisations in raising awareness and supplying information, assistance with auditing, conformity missions or watching for cyber threats.

In 2018 he joined ADN Group's teams and works with businesses and government organisations on the topics of cyber security and analysing the risk of digital threats.
